Freight Train Wrecked.

On Tuesday morning of this week at 8:45 o'clock the local freight train, west bound, was piled up about two miles east of Yale and eight or ten cars were badly demolished. The track was torn up for a distance of thirty rods, every rail and tie was torn out and things in general were put in bad shape. This is the worst mixup that ever occurred at or near Yale and it certainly was a miracle that no one was killed or injured.

The passengers from the two morning trains transferred at the scene of the wreck, and for the balance of the day this was a busy place. The wrecking crews were sent for and worked at the cars until late at night, and the section hands from all the nearby points were called on, and kept busy until about eight thirty, getting the track in shape for travel.

It is thought that the accident was caused by spreading rails, due to the fact that the ties were in very bad shape.

It seems to us that oak ties should be used on all the main lines, as the cedar ones soon rot out, leaving the track in a very dangerous condition. It is a very lucky thing that the accident didn't happen while a passenger train was passing over the place, as the loss of life would probably have been great.
